Prevention Research Center Rio Grande Institute Noon Conference Series: Professional Development

WRITING FOR PUBLICATION

Medical and health researchers publish papers in professional journals to disseminate their findings so that patient care can be improved or a public health problem mitigated and to advance their careers. The process of preparing a manuscript for submission to a journal, however, can be frustrating and even intimidating. Renée Robillard, a former manuscript editor for the New England Journal of Medicine and long-time “author’s editor,” will provide some tips on several aspects of the submission process, including manuscript formatting, critically appraising your paper, and avoiding common errors in grammar, punctuation, and usage.
